Corinne Belvèze is currently policy officer in the airport unit of the European Commission, where she is notably in charge of groundhandling services and winter management at airports. Previously, following a 6 month's working experience at the Dutch Civil Aviation Authority, she has worked for the French Directorate General for Civil Aviation in the field of aerodrome safety. In these two positions, she participated in several aerodrome safety audits (including overseas) and in the European Aerodrome Safety Regulators Group (GASR).

Corinne's academic background begins with Civil Engineer (Engineering master degree of the French civil servant engineering school ENTPE, France), following which she specialised in public policies (she holds a master degree in public administration of IEP Grenoble, France) and airport management (Professional Master Degree in Airport Management from the French Civil Aviation School ENAC, Toulouse).
