Mr. Gernot Kessler is Head of Airports Section of the European Aviation Safety Agency (EASA) since Nov 2010 and leading the EASA team developing airport safety rules.

Gernot Kessler started his aviation career in the military, based on a Master's degree in aeronautical engineering. After several managerial positions in German Air Force and Nato in the field of transport aircraft airworthiness he graduated from General Staff Academy in 2000.

Changing careers into civil aviation, equipped with a commercial pilot license, Gernot became Head of the NAA of the German State of Rhineland-Palatinate and Head of aviation section in the ministry of transport from 2000 to 2007. Subsequently, he joined the European Commission as aviation expert, contributing to regulatory developments in operational, ATM and airport fields.
